DETAILED ACTION

Claim Objections

1. Claim 12 is objected to because of the following informalities: The position of the thermal recording layer is not clear. It is not clear if the thermal layer is adjacent or opposite the base support. Appropriate correction is required.

Priority

2. Should applicant desire to obtain the benefit of foreign priority under 35 U.S.C. 119(a)-(d) prior to declaration of an interference, a translation of the foreign application should be submitted under 37 CFR 1.55 in reply to this action.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

3. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

4. Claims 1-20 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Nakamura (US 2004/0058166 A1) in view of Tani et al. (2003/0224192 A1) and Tamagawa et al. (US 2005/0020448 A1).

Nakamura comprises a powder coated support comprising a base paper and a resin layer at least on one side of the base paper, wherein the resin layer is formed by fusing a powdery resin composition [0098]. The resin layer is equivalent to the claimed fluorescent whitening agent –containing layer. The powdery resin composition further comprises synthetic mica [0046]. The coated support is used in image forming material materials for electrophotography [0103]. Nakamura further teaches having an intermediate layer [0236]. At the time of the invention, it would have been obvious to a person of ordinary skill in the art to use a resin coated paper as the support, because the used of resin coated paper in the electrophotographic recording medium art is commonly known (see the disclosure of Tani). Nakamura does not teach the claimed blocking layer.

Tamagawa teaches an image receiving sheet for electrophotography comprises a paper support, a toner image receiving layer, and a coat layer formed between the support and the image receiving layer (claim 21). The coat layer comprises a binder such as polyvinyl alcohol and gelatin [0130], and an inorganic pigment [0129]. The coat layer is equivalent to the claimed blocking layer. Furthermore, since the coat layer is substantially identical to the claimed blocking layer, the coat layer of Tamagawa inherently blocks oxygen. At the time of the invention, it would have been obvious to a person of ordinary skill in the art to combine the coat layer of Tamagawa with the invention of Nakamura so as to control the surface property of the base paper.

Both Nakamura and Tamagawa also use their recording sheet for thermosensitive material (see [0262] and [0363]).

The thickness of the fluorescent whitening agent containing layer and the thickness of the blocking layer are not disclose in the above references. The experimental modification of this prior art in order to ascertain optimum operating conditions fails to render applicants' claims patentable in the absence of unexpected results. In re Aller, 105 USPQ 233. One of ordinary skill in the art would have been motivated to adjust the thickness of the layers in order to control surface properties, durability, and brittleness of the layers. A prima facie case of obviousness may be rebutted, however, where the results of the optimizing variable, which is known to be result-effective, are unexpectedly good. In re Boesch and Slaney, 205 USPQ 215.
